

COMMUNICATION SKILL - Session 8

Identifying emotions

Emotional identification, or accurately identifying and labeling your emotions, is an important part of emotional intelligence and can help you improve your emotional awareness and regulation.

Here are some ways you can practice identifying your emotions

- Notice and name your feelings: Pay attention to how you feel as things happen and try to name your feelings. For example, you can ask yourself, "What am I feeling?" and try to avoid words like "good," "fine," or "okay".
- Notice where you feel it: Try to notice where in your body you feel the emotion, which can help you develop a deeper connection to it.
- Consider why you're feeling it: Ask yourself, "Why am I feeling it?"
- Consider what you need: Ask yourself, "What do I need?"
- Track an emotion: Pick an emotion, like feeling glad, and try to track it.
- Learn new words for feelings: Try learning new words to describe your feelings.
- Keep a feelings journal: You can keep a journal to help you track your feelings.
- Notice feelings in art, songs, and movies: Try to pay attention to feelings that you see expressed in art, songs, and movies.

Activity

- Step 1 Divide the participants into teams of 4.
- Step 2 One person from each team picks a chit and acts out a facial expression without using any words or gestures. (ex - Angry, Sad, Frustrated, Overwhelmed, Happy, Excited, Anxious, Suspicious, Humiliated, Bored, Exhausted and Surprised)
- Step 3 The other team members guess the emotion being portrayed.
- Step 4 Rotate roles until everyone has had a chance to act out an expression.

Home assignment

Make a chart with all emotions smilies which defines you and write the reason for each emotion.

Make a note of which emotion is used by you maximum.

Review will be done as to why that emotion defines you.
